SPEAKS IN ST. CLAIRSVILLE.—Rev. J. R. Thompson, of the Chapline Street M. E. Church, at the urgent request of the ladies of St. Clairsville, has consented to deliver an address at that place this evening on the subject of Temperance.

IT is one of the sweetest and most consoling reflections of the opening season of buds and flowers, when the brooks shall be released from their icy chains, and there is a fair prospect of the gentle lambs skipping from rock to rock and thistle to thistle, that the nights are rapidly growing briefer, and the iron rod of the oppressive gas man has been broken at the fountain to some extent.

Robbing a Postoffice.—On Saturday days. evening a man named Dwight Jenkins was detected by the postmaster at New Camberland in the act of robbing the postoffice. He had been under suspicion for some time, and was carefully watched. Obtaining an entrance by means of a counterfelt key, he was just about to help himself to what he could find when he was irightened away by the postmaster He was arrested, and was to have been brought to this city last evening.

TEMPERANCE.

The Regular Evening Mass Meeting. The regular evening Temperance mass meeting last night did not attract as large a crowd as usual, yet Washington Hall was comfortably filled.

About 8 o'clock the meeting opened by the congregation singing the hymn com-mencing "O, for a thousand tongues to ing," when Rev. A. J. Lyda led in prayer. Rev. Lyda stated to the audience that Judge Cochran, who was expected to speak at this meeting, was quite ill, and unable to be present. A halt hour, there-fore, could be devoted to short voluntary

Rev. Lyda considered it hardly fair that after so many had prepared their speeches, those who were not in the habit of speaking should be expected to address an undience. Nevertheless, he would speak for about five minutes. He said that the great evil should be fought in every honorable way, and related several incidents illustrating the ruinous effects of intemperance. OPPOSITE GRANT HOUSE.

a rather strange position; he was to speak it in German to an audience two-thirds of whom would not understand what he said. He thought, however, that he said. He thought here was a great evil in the reverend gentleman then addressed his German triends for about thirty minutes. He site of the said upon their knees until the stage periormance had concluded, when they marched in, singing, "Nearer, my God, to here." The drunkard, the coffee house keeper, every one, will acknowledge that intoxication is a great evil. The question is, it we acknowledge that this is a great evil, who has brought on this evil, and who is prolonging this evil—the coffee house kreeper? They are the very cause of it, and we will have to remove the cause of it if we want to get rid of it. But they are protected by the law. As a nation we acknowledge the evil, then as a nation let us remove those laws. How can we get rid of this evil? In the most God-rearing way—true prayer and exhorts—tion. Some people ask, what right have the ladies to go to the saloons and pray? He thought that if men have a right to drink liquor and swear there, then ladies have a right togo there and pray. They go in the lear of God to make a call upon them. They ask them, with prayer, to make a call upon them. They ask them, with prayer, to make happy by them witnessing these isinging and dancing performances. How would be removed. A great General had the would be removed. A great General had the would be removed. A great General had the would their mothers and sisters feel if they knew them to be enjoying such lile. He thought that the great evil would be removed. A great General had said that he would "fight it out if it took him all summer," but we should fight intemperance if it required a lifetime.

She hoped that God would make the proprietor of the saloon see the evil that he is doing, so that he will change his business. Brief remarks were also made by other adies, but owing to the noise and confusion prevailing at the time, their words were scarcely audible to those seated some distance away. Mrs. Hagans then O long.

School connected with St. Matthew's stated that Mr. Laramie desired to say a Episcopal Church held its annual Easter law words, whereupon that genilemes lew words, whereupon that gentleman spoke as follows: ADDRESS OF MR. LARAMIE. ADDRESS OF M. LARANIE.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN-Those Engaged in the Orusade Against the Liquor Setters—I have given you all the privilege you have saked in my place of business, and in return will sak you to grant me the privilege of giving you my views upon the subject, and hope you will listen to me, as I have listened to you. The idea that you may convert me, or any that come to my place, seems ridicalous to all good thinking people. Your motives are good, but your course is, in my opinion and the opinion of the majority of this town, altogether wrong. There is no harm in selling drinks any more than there is in selling anything else. The harm does not come from the sales. It comes from the too frequent use of it.

comes from the abuse or intoxicating bey erages instead of the sales. To believe that you can stop drinking by closing salcons is preposterous. As long as liquer exist in this country, as in all others, it will be drank and abused, and if you close the salcons (which I do not believe you can do) you are degrading your fellow creatures to an extent which you, under your circumstances, cannot possibly conceive—not knowing the tricks and devices which men are capable of devising to obtain a drink if they wish to get one. I have known young men in Northgrages instead of the sales. To believe one. I have known young men in North ern New York, where saloon licenses where or granted, to go and buy a baif pint or a pint and take it to the door and drink out of the measure until the contents were drained. I have known others to say, "Boys, I will have a gallon of whisky at my house to morrow; I want you to come and see me. and we will you to come, and see me, and we will have a jolly time." And the boys did go and see him, and the jolly time, would take place, and each and every one would get as drunk as drunk can be. Now everybody knows that spirituous liquors every body knows that spirituous liquors are as necessary to human beings in many instances as his daily food. If not, why did Christ turn water into wine and tell his people to drink it? I tell you there is no harm in the selling of luquors. There is no harm in drinking liquors any more than there is in the use of anything else, it is only the abuse of anything that makes it bad. But you will tell me if I close my saloon, that no one would have a chance to abuse themselves. That is a mistaken idea. If all the saloons in Wheeling were to be closed to-day, that would not stop the is of a most meritorious order of Massachusetts to convince you that you cannot do say good here? You may think you can do good here? You may the you good here? You may the you go do good here? You say your message has been given you by a heavenly command, but you are mistaken; God never gave you such a command; you take it upon a good and you are altogether out of your sphere. Your duty is at home, teaching young it does how to aboot. Ladies, you are well-come here every day, as I have told you, but you can make no impression on me; your labors are all in vain. I hate to tell you so; yet I do not wish to deceive you. You have cowardly husbands, or they would take your place in the front ranks. You have enough to do to take care of your families; and the husband who lets you go out to fight'a battle is a coward; a man without a principle, a man who is not a man, but a person who ought to wear a skirt instead of brecches. I do not like to make such an assertiou, but circumstances compel me to say that which I think. There has been no word bad cough to express the contempt of parties in town concerning myself. I have stood it all without a person who ought to wear a skirt instead of brecches. I do not like to make such an assertiou, but circumstances compel me to say that which I think. There has been no word bad cough to express the contempt of parties in town concerning myself. I have stood it all without a person who ought to wear a skirt instead of brecches. for different things is what makes your child what he is, and not the saloon keeper. Your wants are not gratified, and your child will never be. Liquors are necessary, and I will selt them as long as the laws allow me, or I take a fancy to do something else. It any of your lamilles are addicted to too much drinking, if you will notify me I will never sell them a drink or allow them in my house. You ask no more from me. I hope you will not think any worse of me for telling you what I think than or me for telling you what I think than for telling you to go on with false hopes. I thank you all for your kind attention, and hope you will not blame me for telling you what I think of this movement. If any of you wish to express yourselves on this subject, you are welcome to do so—I mean any belonging to the crusade.

These remarks were frequently and uproariously applauded. The speaker was frequently interrupted by cries of "That's right," "Go in." "Give it to 'em." etc. When he had concluded a lady arcse and briefly replied to him, but her voice was almost drowingd in the horrible din of the bar-room. She asked Mr Laramie to promise that he would kneel down in his private room and pray God to direct him aright upon this great question, to which he replied that he would make no such promise.

The pledges were then circulated, but with no success. They were in some instances rudely repulsed with insulting language. After singing a final hymn, they left the saloon and disbanded.

CHEMICAL EXPERIMENTS .- The chemcal section of the "Wheeling Scientific Association" made a report, illustrated by some extremely interesting experiments, at the meeting of that body last evening. Mr. Mertz, who was demonstrator, oxygen, was immediately extinguished when brought in contact with substances ontaining no oxygen. It was shown that while such elements as potassium, sodium, or phosphorus, which had a powerful affinity for oxygen, would disengage in air, or with hydrogen as in water, they could not burn in either nitrogen or carbonic acid gas. series of experiments which will not only be instructive to those immediately knowledge in a field that will be of great practical utility to all who, in either man-ufacturing or for other purposes, wish to render Nature subservient to their ends.

[From the Augusta Chronicle.] The Black Chook.—The Opera House was as crowded as we ever remember to have seen it. Every seat was filled, and a large number of persons stood in the suised suring the performance.

The drama proper was well rendered, and several members of the company filling the principal roles displayed consider.

and several members of the company filing the principal roles displayed considerable histrionic ability.

The grand ballet, "Pis Des Mirrors," was very fine, and competent critics pronounced it equal to anything ever seen in New York. M'lle Eugenia Lupo is evidently a first-class dafiseuse. Miss Jennie Bennon is also an excellent deparese. Benson is also an excellent danseuse. The grand transformation scene, with which the performance concluded, is the finest spectacular exhibition ever present-ed to an Augusta audience.

The performance altogether gave an entire satisfaction to the audience of ladies and gentlemen. The Black Crook appears at the Opera House in this city on Thursday night.
